EUREKA STREET

EDITORIAL PROFILE

Eureka Street is a vibrant and growing digital platform for sharing new ideas and commentary on current events in politics and culture. Established in 1991, it has long been one of the most respected independent publications in Australia.

Our readers enjoy leading, balanced analysis of local and international politics, culture, religion and current affairs, from an independent perspective. They turn to us because of our diverse stable of respected writers who range from veteran commentators to cage-rattling digital natives.

Each week Eureka Street features new illustrations from award winning cartoonists Fiona Katauskas and Chris Johnston. It is also home to the fortnightly podcast ChatterSquare, hosted by consulting editor Fatima Measham.

Eureka Street offers the ideal way for advertisers to share in Australia's number one magazine of ideas, comment and analysis.

Key characteristics* of Eureka Street readers:

- High spending power, and open to the online marketplace
- Politically aware, computer literate and well-educated
- Regularly consumes products related to literature, arts and entertainment
- Engaged in current debates on culture and society
- Interested in current theological questions
